A Home for Hoot

A storm knocked down the old oak tree in the Garcias' backyard. Inside a hollow in the trunk, Luis found a little screech owl. It blinked its yellow eyes at him. Its home was gone.

Luis called the wildlife center. A worker named Dana came and checked the owl. "He's not hurt," she said. "But he needs a new place to live." She explained that people can build owl boxes, which are like birdhouses for owls.

Luis and his mom found plans online. They cut boards, nailed them together, and put a layer of wood shavings inside. They hung the box high on a maple tree at the edge of the yard, facing away from the wind.

Every evening for a week, Luis watched the box. Nothing happened. Then, on the eighth night, a small gray face peeked out of the round hole. Luis named him Hoot and whispered, "Welcome home."
