👨‍🍳 Chef Charlie

Charlie wanted to make breakfast in bed for his mom's birthday. He got up extra early, tiptoed to the kitchen, and pulled out a cookbook. Pancakes looked easy enough.

He measured two cups of flour, but some spilled on the floor. He cracked two eggs, and a piece of shell fell in. He fished it out with a spoon. He stirred in milk until the batter was smooth. His dad, rubbing his eyes, wandered in and offered to help with the hot stove. Charlie agreed.

The first pancake was burned black. The second was lumpy. But the third one was golden and fluffy. Charlie added strawberries in the shape of a smiley face and carried the plate upstairs.

Mom sat up and laughed. "This is the best birthday breakfast ever," she said, and she ate every bite. Charlie did not tell her about the floury kitchen floor. Not yet, anyway.
