Pancho's Piñata

For his sister Sofia's seventh birthday, Pancho wanted to make a piñata instead of buying one. He blew up a big balloon and dipped strips of newspaper in a paste of flour and water. Layer by layer, he covered the balloon. It took three days to dry.

When it was hard, Pancho popped the balloon inside and painted the shell bright pink, Sofia's favorite color. He added paper cones for legs and a long neck. It was supposed to be a unicorn. His friend Raul said it looked more like a pink potato with legs.

At the party, Sofia gasped when she saw it. "A pink llama!" she shouted. Pancho opened his mouth to correct her, then closed it again and smiled. The kids took turns swinging the stick until candy poured out. Sofia said it was the best piñata in the world.
