🔭 The Broken Telescope

Every clear night, Felix and his grandfather looked at the stars through an old brass telescope. Grandpa knew the names of all the constellations. He showed Felix the Big Dipper and Orion's belt.

One evening, Felix carried the telescope outside by himself to surprise Grandpa. He tripped on the porch step. The telescope hit the ground, and the lens cracked. Felix's stomach dropped. He hid the telescope in the garage and said nothing.

For two days, Felix felt awful. He could not sleep. Finally, he told Grandpa the truth. Grandpa was quiet for a moment. Then he put his hand on Felix's shoulder. "Telling me took courage," he said. "A lens can be fixed. Trust is harder to fix." The next Saturday, they took the telescope to a repair shop together. By the next clear night, they were stargazing again.
